KQ makes history as first African airline to use sustainable aviation fuel

BY BERNADETTE KHADULLI (KNA)

Kenya Airways (KQ) has become the first African airline to use Sustainable Aviation Fuel (SAF) from Eni Sustainable Fuel for a long-haul commercial flight from Africa to Europe.

For this sustainable flight, KQ is operating a Boeing B787-8 Dreamliner for the return flight between Nairobi and Amsterdam.

KQ is among the 22 airlines that have come together this year to participate in the Sustainable Flight Challenge designed to challenge the aviation industry by stimulating and accelerating innovation.

This competition aims to change and bring some industry players through KQ's sustainable flight deck crew (L) Capt. Hamdan Mohamed Khamis and First Officer Mwangi Robert Nguare (R) set to take off to Amsterdam during KQ's participation in the Sustainable Flight Challenge, where Kenya Airways becomes the first African airline to use Sustainable Aviation Fuel (SAF) from Eni Sustainable Fuel for a long-haul commercial flight from Africa to Europe.

friendly competition. This is the second edition of the Sustainable Flight Challenge (TSFC) presented by SkyTeam. Apart from the use of SAF, the preparations for the flight were done to ensure it was as sustainable as possible. A number of initiatives, covering light travel for guests on the flight, route planning, onboard meals and its packaging, transportation of guests and crew, and gifts were all sustainably prepared as part of the flight KQ116 and KQ117.

Speaking during the flagging off of the Airline at Jomo Kenyatta International airport, Kenya Airways Group Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer, Allan Kilavuka, said Kenya Airways is committed to leading the way in sustainable aviation and reducing its carbon footprint.

"This is a significant milestone for the airline and the broader African aviation industry," Kilavuka said, attributing the airline's success of the test flight to her collaboration with industry partners and government stakeholders.
